

TEXAS CAVALRY MAY GO ABROAD

Baker To Keep Brigades in Service and One Will Be Sent Here.

Austin, Tex., Nov. 19.—Advice has been received here by the adjutant general's department that secretary of war Baker has decided that the two brigades of Texas cavalry will be retained in the federal service, and may even be detailed for duty in France as part of the army of occupation.

This means that the program mapped out just prior to the declaration of the armistice, will be carried out and the two units will proceed to the border on January 2 for service and intensive training preparatory to embarking for France. The second brigade will be stationed at Fort Bliss, near El Paso, and two of the regiments of the first brigade will be at Fort Brown and the third regiment at Del Rio.

The fate of the brigade of Texas infantry has not as yet been fully determined by secretary of war Baker, but there seems to be a fighting chance that this brigade will also be retained and retained in the service.

El Pasoans On Casualty Lists Are Sixty Nine

Eight Receive Distinctions, According To Defence Council Records.

El Paso casualties total 69, including 37 killed in action or died of disease, 35 wounded and seven missing in action, according to the records in the office of the county council of defence, said Miss C. Eloise Davis, assistant secretary.

"The following El Pasoans have received distinctions, according to the information we have: Pvt. J. C. Hatcher, marine corps, color de guerre, captured five Germans; Pvt. Thomas Holliday, airplane corps, rescued a comrade in hydroplane accident, evidencing great heroism; Lieut. R. Tracy Stultz, distinguished service cross, leading his men, after being seriously wounded in action; Capt. James W. Curtis, French color de guerre, for gallantry in action, battle of the Marne; Pvt. Marcus Arnold, distinguished service cross, for heroic conduct; Lieut. R. S. Catlin, brevet certificate and pin, one of the 49 honor men in the American aviation corps; Capt. E. P. Rankin, cited for gallantry in battle of Argonne; Lieut. Wayne R. Stevenson, French color de guerre, gallantry in action.

To Have Tablets Soon.
"The county council will soon have the names of all of these men placed on tablets and exhibited on the corners of the Liberty monument. It is believed that our records are still far from complete and we are doing all in our power to secure the history of every man from El Paso who has been killed, wounded, or who has died in the service, or who has been distinguished, so that we may give them the evidence of gratitude that comes from keeping their memory alive. Will not any friend of any man whose name we have not been able to secure give us the facts in his case so that his name may be included among those who have helped glorify the name of this city?"

8000 Miles To El Paso, Braving Dangers Of U-Boats, Comes A Man On Quest For Sinn Feiner Son

By WILLIAM H. M'NAY.
EYES dimmed and tired by longing for the sight of a son, a voice worn with querying along the land's highways and byways and a heart weakened with yearning—thus might he be described Michael Carnavan, of Dublin, Ireland, who registered at the Sheldon hotel and who for a year and a half has sought his missing son, a political refugee from his mother country.

It was 19 months ago that Carnavan's wife died, her broken heart ceasing its labors when her first born had been an outcast half a year.

A Mother's Plea
"And Mary said to me, Mary was my wife's name," explained the aged father, "she said to me, 'Michael, go out and find Lawrence and tell him we're proud of him, though his act was rash and only a hopeless endeavor.'"

The son was throwing a sheen from the tiles of the Sheldon's lobby as Carnavan told his story. Never once did his eyes cease their kindly, hopeful, piercing gaze into the faces of passing men. If you've ever talked to a man who half believes he is playing a lost cause, yet doggedly and hopefully sticks to his task, you have gauged the attitude of the aged Irishman.

Travel 8000 Miles.
Silver hair, leonine in its profusion and style, crowning the head of a master and leader, aquiline features, gentle eyes and all topping a sturdy figure raised in the open air, describe the man who has traveled more than 8000 miles to once again clasp the shoulders of a boy who is in a political exile.

And so, just resting here between trains, tonight, Michael Carnavan, on what he hopes to be the last lap of his wanderings.

"You should see my boy," he said, "with all the pride a father's voice could ever hold. 'He did no wrong,' just upheld the cause he thought was right. He'll be glad to see me—if I find him—but Mary won't be there to greet him when I bring him home."
